THIS DAY IN BASEBALL HISTORY

1913 In an exhibition game against the Yankees, 25,000 fans watch the Dodgers play their first game in Ebbets Field. Brooklyn beats New York, 3-2, with Casey Stengel hitting the park's first home run, an inside-the-parker.
2012 J.P. Arenchibia's three-run homer in the 16th inning, giving the Blue Jays an eventual 7-4 victory over Cleveland, ends the longest opening-day game in major league history. The Progressive Field marathon surpasses the 15-inning Opening Day contests between Cleveland and Detroit in 1960 and Philadelphia and Washington in 1926.

Tonight's Start: 24-year-old Roenis Elias makes his first career Double-A start tonight in game 2 of the 5-game series in Jacksonville. This is his first career start against the Jacksonville Suns.

Last Outing:

PERSONAL: ROW-nēs eh-LEE-us...Defected from Cuba in 2010. When he was in Cuba, he pitched for the Guantanamo team and last pitched there in 2010. Left Cuba on a boat with 16 other Cubans. It landed in Cancun, Mexico. The boat — which was organized by people Elias said he did not know — departed without a problem. For the next 30 hours, Elias and the other passengers sailed across the Atlantic Ocean, braving the high seas and hoping they were not caught by authorities in international waters that would send them back to Cuba. Finally, with a backpack full of clothes as his only possession, Elias landed in Cancun, Mexico — he was officially a Cuban defector. While the first step of successfully escaping Cuba was completed, things did not necessarily get easier for Elias. He was now in a foreign country without a visa, did not have a baseball team to play for and had no way of getting to the U.S. Elias said he and the five other baseball players on the boat "laid low" in a hotel room in Cancun, biding their time until they could get the paperwork necessary to be in Mexico — a process Elias declined to elaborate on. Once the proper paperwork was acquired, he traveled nearly 1,600 miles to Monterrey, Mexico, where he had a tryout with the local professional team. He didn't get cut, but he didn't exactly make the team either. Monterrey had an "A" team for its top players, and a "B" team for its less talented group. Elias was placed on the "B" team and told he didn't have a chance to be signed by a Major League franchise. Undeterred, Elias finished out the season and spent the offseason in Monterrey working out and improving. He attended one open tryout where a few Major League scouts were present but received no offers. He attended a second open tryout in May of 2011, and this time he caught the eye of a Seattle Mariners scout. He was signed on May 3 and made his U.S. debut on July 17 in rookie ball, more than eight months after climbing onto a tiny boat and leaving the only home he'd ever known.
